The scene ahead is terrifying: a great ravine tracked through the cityscape, filled with trash in both a literal and figurative sense.

Now I will admit to having been very critical of the first act and how insufferable the main character is in it, but I did say I would give chapter 2 another shot if he developed somewhat. I am extremely pleased to say that he has, and more importantly the internal monologues have taken a back seat and interactions have a much more conversational feel. This chapter blows the first one out of the water, now that all the heavy handed political diatribes are out of the way it feels like the story gets a real chance to breathe and not a minute is wasted.

This chapter IMO makes the first one worth slogging through. Siedh is bae. Also this guy is gonna be completely \u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665ed up by the last chapter.
